

Now You're Gone Poem

You're gone, and all that's left is nothing but memories,
Memories that lead me to silence
and tears.

I miss your arms that hold me
tight,

Your snore that fills our room at night.

You're gone, and I can no longer
stare at you as you sleep,

But thank God he lets me see you as I weep.

In dreams we talk and laugh
together.

There I can say I love you more than ever.

You're gone, and I feel so weary
when I'm alone.

Wish you were here and would come back home.

I'm hurting and longing for your touch.

Why does parting have to hurt
this much?

You're gone forever, and we are now apart.

I'm filled with pain that breaks my heart.

You used to playfully sneak behind the door.

Those lovely eyes I see no more.
You're gone, and I terribly miss
your voice,
Your laughter that fills the house
with noise.

Your absence makes me feel so blue.

My life is empty without you.

You're gone, but I know I shouldn't be so awful,

For you left me a treasure to cherish and to nurture.

Our precious little angel; she's all that I've got,

A constant reminder that once I had your love.

Rosycompany.co.uk